

LO - I can use boys conjunctions

BOYS conjunctions

- To make our sentences even more interesting we can use conjunctions to link ideas together: if we can use: but, or, yet and so.
- Each conjunction has a different meaning in a sentence. Look below for some examples.

- But tells us something got in the way:

We wanted to put out the fire but ...the wind prevented us.

- Or compares options.

It is hard to tell if the fire was left on.... OR .... the embers relit.

- So tells us what we did next.

The wind was strong and blew the fire onto the near by buildings SO.. our only option was to pull them down.

- Yet is like but something stopped this from happening.

People tried tirelessly to put out the fire ...YET... the buckets were too small and the fire too big.

BOYS conjunctions

To make our sentences even more interesting we can use conjunctions to link ideas together: if we can use: but, or, yet and so.

What happened: Can you add a but, or, yet, so to these sentences?

In Pudding lane a baker had been cooking that day _____ he had forgotten to check his fire was out.

The fire started on 2nd September _____ lasted for many days.

The bread caught fire _____ then quickly the whole shop went up in flames.

The summer had been really hot _____ the wooden houses caught fire easily.

The houses were covered in pitch to protect them _____ this made them very flammable.

Can you create some of your own sentences using but, or, yet and so.